WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 5.

JOHN WESLEY'S SPECTACLES.—J. Walton Fields, a compositor living in Lawrenceville, has at present in his possession a relic that is a very venerable one, being no less than a pair of spectacles worn by John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. They were made a present to Mr. Fields, who is quite a curiosity-seeker, by Walter M. Moorhouse, another compositor, who got them from his father, who was a local Methodist minister in England. The spectacles came into his possession from an old farmer, who was a staunch Methodist, and whose father had handed them down to him, and were secured in the first place by John Wesley, who during one of his religious pilgrimages through England, had stopped at this farmer's house over night and in the morning left, forgetting his spectacles. The glasses themselves are very peculiar looking. They are very large sized and the frame is of iron, the glasses being set in them very much the same as a light of glass is set in a window at present, only instead of using putty to hold them in their places, bone or a piece of horn is used. The glass is in a perfect state of preservation and anyone can readily see through them, young as well as old. A peculiar fact in connection with them is that Mr. Fields also received at the same time a small photograph, taken from a large painting of "John Wesley at his Mother's Grave." The inscription on the tombstone is so small that it is impossible to read it with the naked eye. The writer placed the antiquated-looking spectacles on and the inscription was easily read.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

"That Miss Jones is a nice looking girl, isn't she?"
"Yes, and she'd be the belle of the town if it wasn't for one thing."
"What's that?"
"She has catarrh so bad it is unpleasant to hear her. She has tried a dozen things and nothing helps her. I am sorry, for I like her, but that doesn't make it any less disagreeable for one to be around her."
Now if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure catarrh every time.
